R.

R, the seventeenth letter of the Latin alphabet, corresponds with the Greek rho (Ρ, ρ). On account of the aspirate which always accompanies the Greek letter, we find it represented by rh in some words derived from that language. The letters r and s seem to have been interchangeable to a great extent, as in arbor, arbos; honor, honos; queso for quaero; hesternus, from heri, etc.; r is also assimilated with l, as in the diminutive libellus from liber, in intelligo from inter-lego, etc. For abbreviations in which R. is used, see Table of Abbreviations.

S.

S, the eighteenth letter of the Latin alphabet, bet, corresponding to the Greek sigma (Σ, σ, σ̄), sometimes representing the Greek aspirate, e.g., sex = ἔξι, sal = ἄλσι, serpo = ἐρπω, ντέρο = super. It is occasionally interchanged with t (as mersare, pulsare, mertare, pultare), and r (as honor and honos). The poets of the older period often elided s before a consonant, e.g., vitā illā dignū loquo; by assimilation, s before f becomes f, as difficilis; it often represents another consonant which has been assimilated to it, as jubeo, jussi (for jubsi), cedo, cessi (for cedsi), premo, pressi (for premusi), pando, passum (for pandsum). For abbreviations in which S. is used, v. Table of Abbreviations.
